URGE EARLY PURCHASE

As Large a Stock as Needed Should Be Laid In.

The committee of food supply of the State Council of Defense is urging that every householder make it a point to purchase his supply of potatoes at an early date. The week beginning October 1 is designated as "potato week." If the consumers will purchase their supply for the winter sometime during that week every householder maket, it will do much toward stabiliting the market. They urge that during that week every householder make their supply for the winter sometime during that week, it will do much toward stabiliting the market. They urge that during that week every housekeeper in the state lay in as large a stock as may be needed of Connecticut-grown potatoes and that they buy thees potatoes direct from some farmer. The farmers have been asked to put a placard in front of their houses announcing what produce they have for sale and to send in their names to the local correspondent of the committee in each town. A general response to this movement is looked for and it is felt that it will result in advantage to all concerned. To greatly increase the quantity of food stuffs customarily grown in the farms and in the gardens of Connecticut and to complify the methods by which farm produce at last finds its way from the farm to the denuer table of any annual town meeting, the selectmen shall notify the voters of such town that at the annual town meeting a ballot will be taken to decremine whether any person shall be come operative on the first Monday of the moint next succeeding said town meeting provided, in towns electing town officers blennially, such ballot shall be taken only at the time and the committee, in discussing the sub-test of meeting the views and the committee, in discussing the sub-test of meeting the sub-test of discussing the sub-test of meeting th ods of distribution and marketing.

"Connecticut is an industrial state and in normal times imports objects."

This means that every consumer in Connec-ticut who buys a sack of potatoes con-taining 2 3-4 bushels, gets 2 1-5 bushels of foreign grown potatoes on which he is paying storage, transportation, and intermediate profits in addition to the price originally paid the grower This is one reason why each person in Connecticut eats on an average of only 2 1-2 bushels of potatoes, while in European countries, which recog-nize the high food value of potatoes and enjoy simpler methods of marketing, the average annual consumption is fom 7 to 9 bushels for each per-

"There is the season when experi enced buyers and dealers arrange for their winter supply and buy up the surplus potato crop from the farmers. The farmer sells because he has no facilities for marketing his crop dur-ing the winter and early spring. Thereing the winter and early spring. Therefore, potatoes are cheapest just now and higher in the winter. Last winter they went to $4 a bushel and were hard to get at that. How much better it would be if everyone can possibly do so would go out in the surrounding country and buy his potatoes from some farmer. If he couldn't store this entire winter supply he could at his entire winter supply, he could at any rate manage a sack or two to his profit. The less handling and knocking about that potatoes get the better they are and the longer they will keep. Here is another advantage in getting freshly dug, homegrown potatoes from the man who raised them."

hamper the activities of the govern-ment by creating a feeling of distrust and suspicion among the people has been busily circulating rumors to the effect that the government expects to confiscate the food stuffs canned and dried by the people for their own use. Such rumors are without fourdation and absolutely untrue. The committee of food supply of the State Council of Defense and the Connecticut Agricultural college both wish to state emphatically that such action is not considered by the government and that food stocks are in hand for winter are perfectly safe in the hands of their owners. Much to the contrary of the reports circulated, it is the desire of the government to encourage the home canning and drying of food.
